Serbian

PRONUNCIATION: sir-bee-YAHN-kah

TRANSLATION: Serbian woman

SOURCE: Dick Oakes learned this dance from both Dick Crum and John Filcich. Atanas Kolarovski taught it at the 1978 North Country Folk Dance Camp.

BACKGROUND: Srbijanka (Serbianka) is an old dignified circle dance (kolo) that was danced at the turn of the century at the elegant balls of the cities of Serbia. It was usually danced at the beginning of the program and led by the most prominent political personage among the guests. Dick Crum, noted Balkan dance researcher, said, "Old-time tamburica players whom I interviewed recognized the name and placed Srbijanka among the earliest kolos brought to the United States. It was only marginally popular, died out, and was revived (at least in Pittsburgh) during the late 1940s or early 1950s in connection with issuance of the Balkan Serenaders' recording. I never saw it done in any other Serbian or Croatian community in the United States, and it died out in Pittsburgh before the end of the decade."
